Review

Through this novel, Ohasmin Judith Meister weaves the story of a young Indian woman with the traditional teachings of the Native Woodland People of the Great Lakes area. The author traces the life of Nika from her birth to an Indian mother and a Scottish father, through her training as a herbalist, medicine woman, wife and mother. As the white people pushed out the Indian people, Nika stands as a bridge between the two worlds. Her lessons teach us all how to use the native wisdom of the past to save the future of the planet. This book is a valuable resource for young people and their educators. --Nan J. Giblin, Ph.D., Chairperson, Department of Counselor Education, Northeastern Illinois University

Osahmin draws upon her extraordinary gifts as writer and storyteller and her expertise in native heritage and history to weave a fascinating life story of a woman struggling to preserve her People s knowledge and traditions during a time of change. A gift to future generations as well as a tribute to her teachers. --Melinda Perrin, O Jigah J Indae, author, Winterberries

Beautifully Written and Engaging and Inspiring Words within
By TheVIEVE

I stumbled across the author of this book through a friend, who had her original book which is about the medicinal, plants, trees and shrubs of MI, where I live. It is my understanding that while the book is fictional it is more than likely based upon her "herb mother". Highly recommended for an insightful and thoughtful way of looking at life...

A good story full of helpful information

By Marsha Reeves

A good story full of helpful information. Some useful perspective on the experiences of Native people as the settlers moved into the Great Lakes.
